It ought to be seen in the Louvre, to be appreciated at its worth, as drawings and casts do not give an adequate idea of its beauty. The Medicean Venus is a work of the Athenian artist Cleomenes, of the later Attic school, in the second century B.C. A statue of Venus Anadyomene (rising from the sea), of Venus crouching in the Bath (Vatican collection), and of Venus loosing her Sandal, are all of this later and declining period of Greek sculpture, where the goddess is represented undraped and more realistic in conception. Venus had many attributes. The dove, sparrow, and the dolphin, and plants the myrtle, rose, apple, poppy, and Fig. 271.--Venus of Milo. Fig. 272.--Statue of Hermes, Capitol. lime-tree, were sacred to her, but varied according to the locality and times. Fig. 273.--Diana of Versailles....
