When Jim and Chris, a disenchanting English couple searching for adventure in a foreign land, find themselves living in the Dust Bowl of Andaluca, they realise that life is not quite what they expected! They stumble across armies of Solar Soldiers and the local Blu Klux Klan. They find they are living in a land where gobbledegook is considered the official local language, and Smurfs can be spotted at roundabouts, dancing gaily with buckets in their hands. They spy battalions of Top Gun swifts and house martins flying in protective formation over a monument dedicated to the Phallus, around which cardboard-touting geriatrics perform their unceasing daily rituals of Banter and Barter. In this Land That Time Forgot, they become unintentionally involved in bizarre religious processions, whilst temperatures soar to the high 40s, even in Springtime, when streets lined with orange and lemon trees exude a pungent perfume, that at once intoxicates and wraps a comforting arm around you. They wonder in amazement at what lies behind the myriad closed doors and shuttered, grilled windows of this raucous, bustling...
